Chapter 129: The Arrival of New Clones

In the ever-expanding landscape of the Absolute Realm, Sung Jin-Woo, ever vigilant and unyielding, decided to further bolster the forces of the Divine Triad. Though his previous clones had already brought unmatched power to their respective domains, he realized that even in such an expansive and secure structure, the balance of the multiverse demanded constant attention.

Thus, Sung Jin-Woo created two more clones, each imbued with a fraction of his supreme power, to reinforce his dominion over the multiverse. These new clones, stationed in critical realms under his watch, would not only maintain control but would further ensure that his influence was felt across every corner of existence.

Sung Jin-Woo’s Sixth Clone: Guardian of the Heavenly Soldiers

The sixth clone, an extension of Sung Jin-Woo’s essence, was tasked with overseeing the domain of the Heavenly Soldiers. This domain, a central pillar of order and divine balance, was under constant pressure from the forces of darkness and entropy. It required someone with the power to maintain its sanctity and, when necessary, reignite its forces to prevent collapse.

The Sixth Clone’s Domain

Position: Stationed in the Heavenly Realm, where the Heavenly Soldiers, the elite warriors of creation, were bred and trained.

Role: As guardian of the Heavenly Soldiers, this clone maintained the cosmic order and directed their military and defensive actions. When the Triad's will required their intervention, the sixth clone would serve as the central orchestrator, commanding legions of Heavenly Soldiers with unrivaled precision.

Abilities:

Cosmic Command: This clone possessed absolute control over the Heavenly Soldiers, capable of summoning, positioning, and organizing them in the blink of an eye. It could even manipulate the fabric of their power, enhancing their capabilities or fusing them with other celestial energies to increase their potency.

Defender of Light: While the Apostles of God personified divine radiance, the sixth clone, though not an Apostle itself, wielded light in a more refined manner. It could create barriers of pure light that not only defended against attacks but also prevented the infiltration of dark forces.

Sung Jin-Woo’s Seventh Clone: Sentinel of the Dark Apostles

The seventh clone was dispatched to the domain of the Dark Apostles, a realm of chaos and entropy, where darkness had a far more dominant presence. While this clone was tasked with overseeing the stability of the Dark Apostles' forces, its role went beyond mere governance. The seventh clone was a balancing agent, capable of ensuring that the forces of darkness remained under control, preventing any faction from becoming too powerful.

The Seventh Clone's Domain

Position: Stationed in the Nocturne Abyss, where the Dark Apostles reigned supreme, and where entropy and destruction were key elements of existence.

Role: As the sentinel of the Dark Apostles, the seventh clone ensured that their chaotic nature did not spiral out of control, maintaining a balance between creation and destruction. It was tasked with overseeing the more volatile and unpredictable forces in the domain, making sure they adhered to the cosmic law set by the Divine Triad.

Abilities:

Master of Entropy: While not a full embodiment of destruction like the Dark Apostles themselves, the seventh clone had an inherent mastery over entropy and decay. It could call forth waves of darkness and force entire civilizations into ruin, all while maintaining the equilibrium between the forces of creation and destruction.

Shadow Dominion: The seventh clone could manipulate and control the very shadows of the Nocturne Abyss, using them to seal gateways, create constructs, or trap foes. It held an intrinsic link to the realm itself, allowing it to interact with the very essence of entropy.

The Clones' Enhanced Dominion

The arrival of these two new clones marked an important shift in the governance of the multiverse. Sung Jin-Woo's strategic foresight ensured that no realm was left unattended, with every facet of creation and destruction under his meticulous care. The seventh and sixth clones were designed not only as protectors but also as enforcers of the cosmic law. Together with the other clones, they formed an unyielding chain of command that spanned every corner of existence, from the brightest heavens to the darkest abysses.

The clones' power, though still a fraction of Sung Jin-Woo's own, was immeasurably potent. Together, they were the embodiment of balance, maintaining the delicate equilibrium of light and shadow, creation and decay. Each clone was a force to be reckoned with, and their dominion, now stretched across two more pivotal realms, further solidified the supremacy of the Divine Triad in the multiverse.

The ever-expanding influence of the Divine Triad was now more complete than ever, with their clones ensuring that the forces of light, darkness, and balance were kept in perfect harmony. Through their tireless watch, the multiverse would continue to thrive, its order unchallenged by any force that might seek to disrupt it.
